Thanks for all your help.Q: Regex to detect possible match for named key in JSON object I am attempting to use Java's Pattern class to detect the possible match for some key in some JSON object. My questions is if there is a pattern that would work to detect if a key:value pair key is named. For example, suppose I have a JSON object as follows (with sample values, of course). { "foo" : "value1", "bar" : "value2", "bar1" : "value3", "key": "value4" } I am looking for a pattern to detect for a key named "bar1". An excellent example of what I am looking to detect would be a key that is named "single_word_key" in a JSON object. This would be so that I can then match against that key to see if it is a single word, or if it is part of another key named "sub_key". Alternatively, if there is any way that Java's Pattern class can detect for the possible match of a named key, that would be acceptable. I will try my own way first though. A: First, you'd do better to match against a string literal, rather than a regex with a free-form string inside of it. You can use Matcher.lookingAt(), and then call group(1) to get the name. Then, since it sounds like you're actually just trying to see if a single word key exists (rather than finding it), you may be better off by simply calling group(0). import java.util.regex.Pattern; import java.util.regex.Matcher; public class HelloWorld { public static 1cb139a0ed
