FIFA 22 introduces "HyperMotion Technology," which uses motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. The data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power FIFA 22 gameplay. "This technology, which has been perfected over many years of game development, is one of the main improvements for this version of FIFA," said Emmanuel Rodriguez, FIFA Technical Director. "Developing this new generation of data-driven AI has been a great challenge for us, and we're very happy to see how this innovation contributes to deliver more realistic and engaging soccer matches.” FIFA 22 HyperMotion is powered by the engine’s new physics system, which powers new animations, including those that govern small-scale actions, in the run and jump of players in high-intensity situations, such as tackles, counter-attacks and through balls. To enjoy the benefits of the data-driven AI, EA has implemented a process that allows game developers to design and test the behavior of every player in real time, by analyzing their movement data before the matches are played, and easily fine-tune the AI. This has enabled AI developers to deliver improvements and corrections to each AI’s movements that make them more responsive and reactive to the player’s actions. All of these improvements have been designed to bring the FIFA experience into more detail. Each fan can now get closer to the game’s universe – and it’s our vision that players will relive these moments like never before. Using the game’s new tools, players can pre-load and watch matches from the comfort of their own homes as if they were at a big stadium in front of thousands of fans. The first title to support the “HyperMotion” system is PES 2017, and you can look forward to seeing more commercial support before the end of the year. FIFA 22 is available on PlayStation 4 and Xbox One on September 28.

Game Features: Evolving Player

Kinematics : Each player in FIFA 22 now has their own unique step length, acceleration and speed. Players can now run at any speed and step length, decelerate and accelerate as if in real life, and tackle as if one of the real-life players did.
