How does firefox handle this? I haven't had any issues pulling in the data (it works fine) so I can only assume it must be doing something clever with the structure of the data to reduce the time it takes for it to fetch, process the data (even though it's already available to the browser) and build the object in the DOM. My question is, can anyone give me a good reference on the best practices for setting up a JavaScript object with JSON data? I'm looking to break down each part of the code and put together a best practice so that I can make improvements without going back to the drawing board each time. Thanks for all the input so far. I've read all the articles I can find but I'm still drawing a blank on what it's called etc. I'll leave this question open for a few days and mark the first answer as the accepted answer. A: If it's any consolation, I spent a bit of time looking for you and I didn't find any. Anyway, I think you are talking about this:
